Tsavo West National Park

By James Reynolds

The Kenya Museum Society's Easter trip saw organiser Narinder Heyer lead a group of 21 people in 7 vehicles to Tsavo West National Park. After a simple but tasty snack in Makindu's Sikh temple, the group entered the park. Roaring Rocks was a scenic spot for lunch, offering a wonderful view over the hills and plains, before the groups moved on to enjoy the relative cool of a stroll around Mzima Springs. A ford over the strong-flowing Tsavo River presented something of a challenge, meaning the party reached Ziواني Camp, that would be home for three nights, in the southwest of the park, rather later than expected.

Saturday began with a tour of the Ziواني estate, once a sisal plantation owned by a British explorer and entrepreneur, now transformed into a large farm producing seed maize and fruit, thanks to modernisation of irrigation methods. From there, the group moved on to the deep blue waters of Lake Chala, with some scrambling down to swim in the warm waters, and others driving up to the now ruined lodge in a spectacular setting overlooking the lake and neighbouring Tanzania. The trip back to Ziواني left time for a nature walk around the back of the hotel – and close-up views of numerous Nile crocodiles and two blots of hippos. The day was rounded off with a presentation by Narinder on the colourful life of Ewart Grogan.

Easter Sunday saw the group drive through the green expanses of the national park to emerge on the shore of Lake Jipe. If animals were hard to spot, there were plenty of birds on display. Two punctures in the tyres of the same vehicle threw down the gauntlet to the more enterprising members of the group, but once this test was passed, and a lakeside picnic lunch consumed, the party drove past Grogan's architecturally eclectic 'castle' perched on a hillock by the road on the way to the market town of Taveta, where the memorials to those who perished in World War I fighting between British and German forces could be observed.

Departure on Monday morning saw the group drive through Oloitokitok, skirting Amboseli national park, before the rather less pleasant stretch of Mombasa Road back to Nairobi. If Kilimanjaro remained stubbornly swathed in clouds throughout the weekend and there were more elephants on view outside the park in villages south of Taveta than in the park itself, there were more than enough other attractions to make the trip a very enjoyable one.

Lake Magadi & Lake Natron - Loisiijo

By Jane Sessa

On Friday, May 30, a group from the Kenya Museum Society left Nairobi for a holiday safari to Lake Magadi and Lake Natron. Passing through a beautiful scenic descent into the Rift Valley we arrived at Magadi. The first stop was Lake Magadi and the hot springs, which we quickly discovered were more than aptly named. Several members of the safari tested the waters although only one person had the gumption to immerse herself in the very, very, hot water. At the spring, we met up with our guide, Nickson and had a pleasant picnic lunch under a tree. After lunch we headed for Loisiijo driving through much of the Shompole reserve. The lodge is set beside a river with lovely fig and tamarind trees and everyone enjoyed Narinder's excellent cooking at dinner.

On Saturday, we did a game drive through the very dusty reserve, seeing zebra, giraffe, wildebeest and many birds. There were a couple of game walks with Nickson and another excellent dinner with lots of good conversation.

On Sunday, we headed to Lake Natron, which was quite low due to the lack of rain. Still, the vistas were gorgeous and there were many more game sightings. Some of the more interesting game that we saw that are a bit rare included the yellow bat, the avocet and the Goliath Heron. Although we saw evidence of elephants and lions in the area including the occasional roar, we did not manage to see these.

On Monday, there was another early morning game drive and then we packed up and said goodbye to our lovely accommodations. On our return trip, we drove over the Lake Magadi causeway and stopped for lunch at the Olorgesailie Museum, which is the site of one of the world's largest finds of prehistoric stone tools. The return trip afforded more gorgeous scenery and a herd of camels that kindly moved off to the side of the road as our caravan came upon theirs.

Saving the Little Five

Conserving the small mammals of Kenya

Did you know that the elephant shrew or golden-rumped sengi are found nowhere else on Earth but in the Arabuko/Gede forests in Malindi County, and that the African maned rat is the only vertebrate known in Kenya to apply plant poison on its coat to protect itself against predators?

Kenya is justifiably known for its 'Big Five' game animals that attract visitors from around the world; but it is also home to genetically unique small mammals that are not as visible but are also in need of protection in a difficult environment where they are often stranded in single populations.

Join Bernard Agwanda, Research Scientist & Mammal Curator at the National Museums of Kenya, as he explains the fascinating existence of these small creatures and what we can do to help protect them and their environment.
